

Harold Weisberg
Hyattstown, Md. 20734
7/27/67

Dear Mr. Albree,

I try and answer every letter I get, which is a considerable chore when I'm working not less than 18 hours daily seven days a week trying to complete the task I have undertaken.

Perhaps you will understand the frustration your letter causes me when I tell you I worked without income, ran up considerable debt, and printed three books, of which you at least know, and answer in them every one of the questions you ask.

I do not discourage easily, but if I did your letter would make me wonder if it is all worthwhile.